Photographer Josh Levitt, who shot his first formal wedding this year, installed Lightroom CC to make a big change. He was a Nikon user until this change. In this course, Josh teaches Lightroom CC and the new workflow he created for his wedding photography. Our job is to combine these two concepts and make a workflow that achieves what we've been shooting today and next. The new photo editing software is (unsurprisingly) adhering to the Adobe Creative Cloud model for a subscription service. There is a one-time $20 price for the app, but you can get a lifelong $10 subscription anytime you want. One of the more powerful features of this version is the ability to search for anything in the image. There are four text tools, and the new "Sketch" feature allows someone to doodle over an image and quickly apply various brush styles to the resulting document. Still, there is a lot of room for improvement in terms of haptic feedback, as it is much more difficult to zoom and pan around with the new controls, for instance. Overall, the interface is inconsistent, making it confusing to find the tools you need.

With Edit > Select simple and powerful selection tools, you can quickly delete layers or workaroud right now and refocus later. This native 3D revolution will be a big step forward for the technology of the entire Adobe product portfolio. Once this capability is completed, it will be exciting to fully see how the Creative Cloud suite of tools, like the addition of Autodesk 3D design, Photography, Video and Animation tools to the suite, can benefit from the application of native GPU APIs to produce new and exciting ways to produce revenue streams for the company. It would be really interesting how this native 3D revolution will change the way you work in Photoshop. While it will look like you are working with a totally new interface that incorporates the best from Adobe 3D and Autodesk 3D design tools, but the performance and workflow that you are familiar with in Photoshop will remain the same. I cannot say for sure that Photoshop will look totally different in the future, but the native performance that comes with the new native 3D toolkit and also the other new feature sets Adobe has been working on, make this a great time to explore what the future holds for Photoshop. The update was clearly needed as that was some of the most confusing IOS 13 update to date - not to mention it quickly brought a bunch of iPhone, iPad, Mac and watchOS bugs to light in its first release because Apple wanted to get it into people's hands, even if it did have some serious issues in it. As a part of the iOS 13 update, the Messages app has some improvements such as the ability to pin emails to iMessage more easily, the ability to see the contact list of the messaging app despite some files being hidden, and an ability to preview the contact list along with BBM Meetings. The new Shadow Match feature matches a shadow to the existing lights and shadows found in an image, which is incredibly useful for enhancing shadows, parts you don't want to enhance, and even adding a new drop shadow for subtle effects. For busy office workers, professional desktop users, and creative individuals who work in regular pace, Photoshop's new Smart Sharpen option enables you to quickly reposition the selected sharpening function -- no more random and real-time sharpening that kills your battery and your process! Tools such as the Content-Aware Face retouching and the Gradient Mesh features will be of great help for those of you who would like to improve their images with ease. Another huge addition to Photoshop is the addition of a lighting feature called Scatter and Spread. It's basically a tool which you can move around to selectively select lights and shadows and push them towards or away from the subject and the rest of the areas of the image.

Adobe created an open-source version of its in-house content management suite, SiteCatalyst, called Aura. Aura is also known as Analytics and Site Analytics. It is normally used as an internal tool, but is often used within the marketing department of a website. The new feature set for Photoshop is largely targeted towards the CC 2020 update, and it will include a host of new features. Some of the features we highlight include:

- A new "Deep Search" feature allows you to "understand and analyse your massive collection of images in the cloud," and then discover images with new behaviours beyond the usual "Done for Here" and "Views" categories.
- A refreshed "New Art & Print" panels will provide you with new, clever ways to sort your images and save time.
- A new Link & Guides palette will help you import your Google Maps layers into Photoshop.
- A "Design to Device" feature will allow designers and hobbyists to create new templates that will be automatically applied to any device.
- Photoshop will let you know when your faves are available to make it simple for you to access and share.

The recently announced features for 2020 update include Picture Processor Override, which allows users to override the colour style of their images to keep certain settings, like blur filters, using the default settings. There's also new options for live capture that allow users to change the capture sensitivity of the camera, as well as a brand new click-to-script function that allows users to click on the image elements on screen and assign a unique name to each selection; creating a history of your images that can be used as a template to repeat the selection. There is also a new smart object feature that allows users to combine an image with text and other elements to create collages.
