I'm so glad I stumbled on a website dedicated to Photoshop review. I've been using Photoshop for over 20 years. I enjoyed the refinement of the newer versions, I guess hardly anyone has time for learning Photoshop today, but it is the foundation for modern graphic design. It has taken me a long time to adjust to the changes, even though I had begun using Lightroom for a few months. I used to use a lot of Adobe software, particularly Photoshop. I had a fair idea how Photoshop worked and have used it as a graphic designer for over twenty years, I am still a designer at heart and am comfortable using Lightroom/Adobe Photoshop and CS6 Creative Suite. The transition from Photoshop 5 to Photoshop CS6 was hard at first but I am getting used to Lightroom, especially the Smart Objects, Organiser, and multiple work folders. Lightroom is quick and efficient at processing a set of images and is more stylish than Photoshop. It makes it fun to get images from photographer to screen and I appreciate the more familiar user interface. Others have noted the same, that the smart previews do not duplicate the native smartpreview mode of Lightroom. I also picked up on a (slight) performance hit while working on a large number of NEFs in My Pictures mode. I via a variety of methods worked around this performance issue. As mentioned in other reviews smart pre-view, smart preview (native), smart previews via command line, cropping and emphasizing images I eventually settled on this approach.

At 4GB of free RAM and an i7 core i5 job is still quite snappy with this method. Even with this image review is just as enjoyable. When I return to a project I still regularly tweak it.

Note that this is not really a review of Lightroom 5 yet

At some stage, I will revisit this issue.

Regards! Sren

“With the release of the new desktop version of Photoshop, we’ve infused all of our product knowledge and experience into the most advanced and powerful image editing tool on the planet with over 20 years of combined experience,” said Shantanu Narayen, CEO of Adobe. “As we continue to push the boundaries, deliver industry-leading experiences and technological innovations, creativity and collaboration are at the core of what users expect and demand—especially when they want to work on a wider variety of creative projects and surfaces. In Photoshop today, we deliver the right tools, features and workflow for every stage you need across every project and surface.” As we move more and more of our day to day interactions to the web, there’s more pressure to use the same applications in web as on our laptops and without the need for learning new software features, the product has to evolve to adapt to this new reality and for the creative community, Photoshop is one of the most important software to be used today. Here are some of the top reasons why Photoshop is such a necessary tool in this modern era. Additional innovations include:

- New features for Adobe Camera Raw, including HDR tone mapping that combines light and shadow data to dramatically increase the dynamic range of images.
- Content-Aware Fill, which automatically replaces the missing or faded parts of an image.

“The ground-breaking innovations in Photoshop for the web are removing barriers to great photography and visual storytelling,” said Michelle Paxton, vice president of Creative Solutions, Adobe. “With these new features, our goal is to democratize quality and deliver real-time collaboration and powerful, intuitive and configurable workflows. This year at MAX, we face an unparalleled number of situations where people want to communicate with each other instantly, as well as across surfaces. That’s the only way to solve the scale and complexity of the problems they’re facing today.”
