===== A 30-year-old woman presented to the emergency department with acute onset of pain, swelling, and redness of her left ankle. She reported that the injury had occurred while her left ankle was under pressure in a boot. She denied the presence of a febrile illness or constitutional symptoms. She had no history of trauma or other medical conditions. The only medication the patient had been taking was oral contraceptives. She reported that she was not taking any other medications. A physical examination revealed marked edema and erythema with tenderness and mild swelling of her left ankle. Palpation of the distal left leg revealed a diffuse painful, warm, indurated area with central nodules. On inspection, the skin was boggy and crusted over. Skin was negative for scale, folliculitis, and other suggestive findings. The patient's temperature was normal, and she had a normal blood pressure. She had no leukocytosis, and no discharge was noted from the left ankle. Laboratory data showed a normal complete blood count with a neutrophil count of $8.9 \times 10^9/L$ and C-reactive protein of 50 mg/L. Liver function tests and renal function tests were normal. The complete blood count and renal function tests were repeated 3 days later, and they were normal. The patient had a history of recent travel in Europe and received a diagnosis of cellulitis of the lower extremity. Routine cultures grew methicillin-sensitive Staphylococcus aureus with no anaerobic bacteria. According to the antimicrobial susceptibility results, the patient was treated with a cefazolin regimen for 10 days. During that time, she did not receive any other antibiotics. The cellulitis improved, and the patient's physical examination revealed no signs of local or systemic f988f36e3a
