All purchases on this server (190786) and all physical and virtual rewards were completed in less than 30 minutes, were successful. - DEFECT: If users share mod and apk information on the network, and the network search function is active on the game server, then.Q: Store HttpResponseMessage in session so that it persists after session ends When calling an API, I need to ensure the authentication is valid, so I'm sending the Authentication header with the request. If the response indicates it was authenticated, I'm setting a variable in the session to ensure it's valid (via Session["authentication"].

HttpRequestMessage HttpResponseMessage

HttpContext Session I need to ensure the response also persists so I'm setting the HttpResponseMessage in the

ext as below: var response = await client.PostAsJsonAsync(uri, parameters); var

token = new

AuthenticationHeaderValue("Bearer", response.Headers.Authorization);

ext["token"] = token; The problem is the AuthenticationHeaderValue() constructor will erase the value for the header in the HttpResponseMessage if it exists so the application session never sees it. Is there anyway to inject it into the context without erasing it? A: After reading through the source code, it is relatively easy to persist the header value in the context. The key is to convert the AuthenticationHeaderValue into a byte array and save it in a (nearly) immutable session key in AppSettings.

public class MyAppSettings : ConfigurationSection { public const string SessionKey = "authentication-token"; [ConfigurationProperty(SessionKey)] public AuthenticationHeaderValue[] Value { get => (AuthenticationHeaderValue[])this[SessionKey]; set => this[SessionKey] = value.ToArray(); } }

I can then set the token in the context:

var key = "~/appsettings.json"; string filePath = Path.Combine(HttpContext.Current.Server.MapPath("~/App_Data"), key); var settings = File.Read
