Photoshop will fast-forward you to an era when we'll look back and marvel at all the amazing, groundbreaking images that we've created with it. And if it's a designer that you want, not a photographer, Photoshop is a better choice than any of the lightweight photo editing or compositing tools out there. Photoshop will get you there. The Share for Review solution, which was available for the last few releases of Photoshop, enables collaborative editing without disrupting Photoshop's experience for individual users. Every time a user saves out a project to the cloud, Photoshop automatically compresses any changes made to any files and saves them to an encrypted area of the cloud drive. This enables users to share work on Android and iOS devices, PCs and Macs, tablets and large monitors without sacrificing any security, and lets them easily collaborate with others through the cloud. The new Photoshop desktop app reintroduces the popular two-pane view, allowing images to be edited and viewed on two pages. Users can easily switch between the two without having to sacrifice performance or undo the changes they've made by simply switching images. Users can also now center and zoom to images in a browser in order to accurately and efficiently edit them. The new browser-based editing features enable users to choose the best place to view or edit images, whether it's on a big screen or on a mobile device. This lets professionals easily make minor edits on the go.
