As far as the workflow is concerned, I can say that the new Photoshop CS5 has some great features that definitely make it a step ahead from the previous version. One big feature is the new Content Aware Fill module. This tool can much more intelligently and accurately fill empty areas in your images without leaving any trace. A vector image is not like the actual design of the asset. It has a different value for every shape. In other words, a vector image – unlike a bitmap – needs to be accurately represented to make a reproduction of the design. A vector image file size takes up a lot of disk space. It is a representation of every potential design. Visual effects can get out of hand with a large file, especially with a vector design. Both large files increase more time to download. A user can mask and select only the regions of the image that need to be edited. This is very useful when it comes to duplicating existing layers using the 'duplicate layer' command. The user can either select the background or the image and accomplish a perfect duplicate. The user can completely change the hue, saturation, and brightness of the image using the color panel. This is particularly useful when it comes to editing an image that has been shot in low light or has erratic white balance. In the earlier versions, the user would have to manually extract outlines from an image, crop the image, and place it on layers. Now, this can be done automatically. This is one of the complex and useful features, which will help designers get extracts from the images in just a single sweep. In earlier versions of Photoshop, a predefined set of tools were available, such as the crop, rotate, and perspective tools. Elements 20 provides predefined radial, minimal, and box tools that are light-weight and ideal for quickly composing more complex images. These tools include the new fill, gradient, and layer effects tools, and line, ellipse, and polygon selection tools. One of the most important new features for the visually-orientated post-production world, called Smart Sharpen, is now included in Photoshop. It enhances tonal adjustments for photographs that have endured exposure problems, camera noise, or a lack of sharpness due to close-ups. The new Content Aware Fill feature is used to match colors and textures of an image to the colors and textures of the surrounding space. This map can then be used to modify the image with soft grainy artifacts that blend into the surrounding area.
