This study examined the relationship between average self-monitored blood glucose (SMBG) levels and the 6-month HbA1c value. Patients with newly diagnosed diabetes (n = 308) were enrolled at the entrance to the outpatient clinic of our hospital. They were given a self-monitored blood glucose (SMBG) device to measure blood glucose concentration at home, and the A1c (HbA1c) level was measured at the clinic. A visual analog scale (VAS) was used to grade the overall perceived level of blood glucose concentration. VAS score (lower values are better) and average SMBG (HbA1c level) were compared. The correlation between the average SMBG level and the VAS score was -0.298 and significant (p or = 9.0%). Blood glucose levels were significantly higher among the groups with HbA1c > or = 9% than among those with a normal HbA1c value. Similarly, significant differences were found in perceived blood glucose values among the groups with HbA1c values ranging from 7.0 to 9.0% and > or = 9.0%. The A1c level seems to correlate better with patient-rated "blood glucose control" than with SMBG.Q: Screen brightness is not sensitive when working on a laptop As the title says, my screen's brightness is not sensitive (ie. the same with 50% brightness as with 100% brightness) when I'm working on my laptop. I'm using Ubuntu 17
