Sprite Maker v2.2 by Artalabs is an iPad app for making 2D animations with cartoons, or “sprite sheets.” I spent quite a while playing with this app trying to get it to make me happy. This app seems limited, however, so it’s not useful for everyone. The program’s limitations include: it doesn’t accept layers BUT it does accept button clicks (1st and 2nd including other objects, all 3rd including none), it has no ability to position, modify, size, or rotate layers but it does let you add layer effects such as text, borders, gradients (.png or.pdf), reflections, and shadows, but you can’t add multiple layers (or at least I couldn’t), you can’t easily click on layers (so that they become editable), and you can’t merge multiple layers or groups. There is, as I mentioned, no layer adjustment or layer modification tool. Overall, the interface is fairly intuitive and the fact that the sprites created will look good on paper may interest some people. The Auto-layer Adjustment tool is very straightforward, and there is no zoom tool. Magic Plus II (by Skitchit ) is a great iPad drawing/collage/organizing app that works well with portraits. The program has a zoom tool and a grid tool. When you open a new file, you'll see a lower horizontal black line that looks like a table of contents with numbered tabs. There are six tabs to start with, then you can add new tabs. Each tab has a different list of categories. On the overall tab, you can see a progress bar. The tabs are: Home, Importing, Cues, Draw, Collections, and Gallery.
