To take advantage of these new features, the foundations of user-perceived performance and stability in Photoshop has been rebuilt, include:

- Exposing Adobe's powerful native APIs in the AMD-based GPU SKUs.

This support includes new features in Photoshop CC 2018, such as:

- Multiple Camera Rotation
- Advanced Image-wrapping tools
- Content Aware Fill

They also enable us to improve the performance of the more compute-intensive operations in Photoshop. This means that Photoshop now takes full advantage of the native APIs which means faster application startup time, faster performance in the editing and compositing tools, and fewer lags or freezes in those cases. Users will instantly feel the benefits of this update in the many advanced features we've added to Photoshop," said Daniel Cross, lead product manager, Adobe Photoshop. "Thanks to their collaboration with Adobe, developers now have access to these and other third-party tools giving users even more tools to make their job easier."

The feature can work with both JPEG and TIFF files, and the PSD files are natively compatible with the new format. The update also introduces new and improved versions of all filters, such as Lens Correction, Artistic, Enamer, and Refine, which are all able to be applied to a single content area in just one click. This even applies to selections, polygonal sculpting, and the ability to edit masks and brushes on a paper layer. Importing Photoshop content designed for printing is also much easier thanks to the new content panel. Adobe Photoshop Lightroom is now universally available to use on both Premier Pro and the web, and notes are shared based on a user's location rather than a specific project. And Adobe has introduced the ability to share notes with lens correction labels, as well as non-linear and slider-based credit cards.
