Your artwork consists of tiny squares of color, which are picture elements called pixels. A powerful photo editing program is the tool used to access these pixels and make them look exactly the way you want them to. The Eraser tool can be found in three locations: Underneath the Palette, it's a circle when activated; in the Layers panel, it's a triangle; and in the Panoramic panel, it's a circle. How It Works: You can use the effects in the Painter and Eraser tools to alter the color, contrast, brightness, or saturation of small areas of your image. You can adjust the opacity of the brush to control the eraser's effects. You can also use the effects on the Layers menu of the Palette. What You Can Do: You can change the RGB (red, green, and blue) values of any color in the image to make it more purple, less orange, brighter or darker. You can also use the colorize tool to change the color of individual pixels. You can also use the correction filters to decrease image noise—that is, the white dots that appear around your subject in lower-end digital cameras. You can alter the contrast and brightness of your image using several tools. The Eyedropper tool lets you select a color from your image and use that color as the paint to which you add brightness, saturation, volume, darkness, or shadow. Paint is used in somewhat predictable ways, for example, to add shadows below your subject and to blend areas, and the depth and complexity of your photo is defined by the amount of paint you apply. e3d0a04c9c
