JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) - South African President Cyril Ramaphosa on Saturday unveiled a National Health Insurance (NHI) scheme intended to take on private insurers and make health care more affordable, while critics said private hospitals should also be included in its plans.
Ramaphosa, a former leader of the ruling African National Congress (ANC), called on his supporters in the party to back his vision of healthcare as a right, as he vowed to "roll back" costs. Speaking in Cape Town, Ramaphosa, who also previously headed the government's Department of Health, promised universal access to health care by 2034.
He said that universal health care would roll back some of the economic inequalities that currently exist in the health care system. Ramaphosa was re-elected as ANC leader in December, ahead of a national vote on the election of a new leader to succeed President Jacob Zuma, following his chaotic nine-year reign. While Ramaphosa has said he would push ahead with the reform of health care regardless of who he would face in the ANC, many people are wary of his ability to force through the massive overhaul of the healthcare system. The new plan announced by Ramaphosa offers a mix of public and private providers, though the details were not immediately available. The national health insurance would be funded in part by putting more money into a Social Protection Fund, set up by Zuma in 2016 to protect against the effects of economic shocks and reduce poverty. Ramaphosa said he hoped to find 50 billion rand ($3.24 billion) to fund the NHI in coming years. But the health care sector is already struggling with $5 billion in losses, he said. Ramaphosa suggested private providers should also be included. "We also provide for, well, I suppose, you could say, for the private option," he told journalists. "One needs to be critical about whether or not the private option is, because it's supposed to be for those who cannot afford to pay." The last private insurer, Mediclinic Ltd, shuttered in 2012.
