In the field of sewage treatment, it is typically necessary to condition the sewage prior to its treatment. The term "conditioning" refers to the addition of water and/or chemicals to the sewage in order to assist in the ultimate treatment of the sewage. This is accomplished by mixing the sewage with water, thereby diluting it, adding water to remove solids, etc. In order to condition the sewage prior to treatment by the septic tank system, it is often necessary to utilize a water control or flow regulation system to supply a predetermined volume of water to the sewage at a particular rate. This is to ensure that the proper water/sewage mix is supplied to the septic tank system throughout the time period in which the sewage is being treated. Moreover, once the sewage reaches the septic tank system, it is important that the flow of the sewage into the septic tank system be controlled. If the flow of the sewage through the septic tank system is not properly regulated, the amount of time the sewage is maintained
